

MASTER OF PUBLIC HEALTH IN THE FIELD OF HEALTH PROMOTION

Program Director: B. Bingenheimer

Students in the master of public health (MPH) in health promotion program learn to use proven social and behavioral theory and behavior change models and strategies to improve health behaviors and practices for a variety of populations. They acquire the skills to plan, design, implement, evaluate, and communicate programs and research targeted toward health promotion and disease prevention for the public.

The program is designed to prepare individuals to become responsible and productive public health professionals, capable of assessing, implementing, managing, and evaluating health promotion and health education programs for the public and for at-risk populations. Through required courses and electives, students are trained in social and behavioral approaches and applications for improving public health via interventions at the individual, group, organizational, and societal levels.

The health promotion program explores how best to advocate for social practices, policy, and law that provide supportive environments for the improvement of public health. Students put their knowledge into practice, both in the classroom and in the field. With courses scheduled in the late afternoons and early evenings, the programs allow students to obtain valuable career experience while they earn their degree.
